

Self-Assessment

The Faculty of Educational Sciences is committed to implementing the Higher Education Institutional Capacity Assessment Tool (HEICAT), which aims to enhance institutional performance and improve the quality of higher education through the analysis of the administrative, academic, and research capacities of educational institutions. The model covers several areas, including governance and leadership, human and financial resources, quality of education and teaching, scientific research, and interaction with the community and industry. It is worth noting that this assessment contributes to supporting the faculty's strategic planning and enhancing opportunities for international academic accreditation, thereby improving the quality of education and scientific research.